Richard Hunter

Richard Hunter is the Managing Director of Fitch Ratings' global power group. In 2002, Richard moved from Fitch's London office to New York to head the agency's global power practice in North America. The U.S. team covers 300 energy companies in the gas and power sectors.

Richard had joined Fitch in 1996 to initiate coverage within Europe of companies in the power, oil and gas sectors. He authored the agency's criteria for European utility ratings, co-authored the agency's criteria for emerging market oil and gas ratings and led analytical work on debut rating coverage in the British, French, German, Italian, Russian, Romanian, Polish and Central Asian energy sectors.

Richard earned an MA from Oxford University, and joined Fitch from the International Credit Division of Deutsche Genossenschaftsbank, where he held credit roles in Frankfurt and subsequently in London, responsible for management of the institution's exposures to a variety of corporate and financial institutions throughout Europe. Richard is a member of Fitch's International Corporate Finance Credit Policy Board, a Prokurist of Fitch Deutschland GmbH and a member of the Institute of Petroleum.
